A social enterprise is an organization that applies commercial strategies to maximize improvements in human and ①environmental well-being. Social enterprises can be ②structured as for-profit or non-profit. Many commercial enterprises would consider themselves to have social objectives, but commitment to these objectives is motivated by the perception ③which such commitment will ultimately make the enterprises more financially valuable. Social enterprises differ in that inversely, they do not aim to offer any benefit to their investors, except where they believe that doing so will further their capacity ④to realize their social goals. In the U.S., the term, social enterprise', is generally associated with 'doing charity by doing trade.' In other countries there is a ⑤much stronger emphasis on community organizing and democratic control of capital rather than charity.

Eating involves all human senses the moment you put something inside your mouth. Taste is anatomically ①determined. Scientists categorize people as "tasters" or "non-tasters." Which category you fall into ②depending on how many taste buds you have on your tongue. Non-tasters with ③few taste buds don't taste bitter foods like grapefruit and broccoli very intensely. They can eat chili peppers and not suffer. Tasters, on the other hand, have more taste buds and ④are sensitive to bitter and sweet tastes. Then there are "super-tasters," people whose tongues are covered with taste buds and ⑤who are extremely sensitive.

For many students, the school lunch can be a chance they have for a well-balanced meal. There are things parents can do ①to help their children make better choices at lunchtime. One of the best ways that parents can teach their kids how to eat healthy ②are to set a good example. The family eating habits at home often follow the student to school. If the student is used to ③eating unhealthy meals at home, the same habit will take place during lunchtime at school. Another way is to look over the lunch menu at home before any choices ④are made. Parents can suggest healthier choices. If there are no healthy choices ⑤available, parents can suggest a lunch from home. Parents can also teach their children to avoid chips, sodas, or sweets for lunch.

Reality TV programs are products, just like T-shirts or coffee, and consumers can't seem to turn them off. But why do consumers keep ①watching them? This is one type of question consumer behavior researchers are interested in answering. Researchers say ②that reality TV programs offer several benefits to consumers, including satisfying their curiosity. "We all like to watch people in situations ③which we ourselves might be pressured. We can feel what they are feeling but at a safe distance," says Professor Kip Williams of Macquaric University. We also role-play with ourselves in the context of the show, ④imagining how we might react in a similar situation. This, researchers say, can teach us ⑤to be self-improving.

When you think about competitions, you probably think of sports such as basketball and football. Not all serious competitive events are athletic, though. One example is the Rock Paper Scissors World Championship, ①in which contestants compete for large cash prizes. Rock Paper Scissors is a simple game between two players. Each player counts to three and then "throws" one hand forward, ②making one of three hand signals. A fist means "rock," a flat hand means "paper," and two extended fingers in a V shape mean "scissors." Some people might consider a Rock Paper Scissors contest ③strange. Around the world, though, people compete in many events ④what others think are crazy. In Finland, hopeful guitar heroes compete in the Air Guitar World Championship by ⑤playing invisible guitars in front of an audience.
